Cemetery:

SARIGOL MILITARY CEMETERY, KRISTON, Greece

Grave Reference/Panel Number:

D. 542.

Location:

Sarigol is a village some 40 kilometres north of the town of Thessalonika, in the direction of Lake Doiran. The cemetery is 3 kilometres out of the village and is close to the Civil Cemetery (250m) set in farmland, but it is signposted and visible from the road.

Historical Information:

From April to June, 1917, the 35th Casualty Clearing Station was at Sarigol. Its place was taken by the 21st Stationary Hospital, which remained until December, 1918. From these two hospitals there were buried in the Military Cemetery, 150 dead, very many of whom had been wounded in the British attack on the Grand-Couronne and Pip Ridge in April-May, 1917, and September, 1918. In February, 1921, 560 graves from Janes Military Cemetery, a few miles North of Sarigol, and serving the same front, were concentrated to this site. They were, with a few exceptions, those of men who died in the 31st Casualty Clearing Station between August, 1916, and October, 1918. The cemetery at Janes was on low ground, and, under the normal conditions of this region, it was found difficult to approach and almost impossible to maintain in good order.
